BANQUETERS HEARD OF WORLD MOVEMENT

and ideas relative to the laymen's mission were incorporated. It favored: the inauguration of a vigorous educational campaign touching on all the phases of denominational missionary work; the appointment of strong missionary committees in all churches for the purpose of creating renewed interest in missions; the inauguration of an every-member canvass for missions with a view of securing a missionary offering from every member; that a supreme effort be made to raise the financial goal of contributions to missions to what will reach or exceed, on an average, ten cents per member per week; that the Baptists of Barre pledge to Dr. Stackhouse and the laymen's missionary movement their loyal support and that no efforts be spared to make the movement a mighty triumph.

The attendance included laymen from different sections of Washington county and its special significance rested in the fact that an inspiring message will be carried back to every church in a section of considerable area. Montpelier laymen attending returned home on the last car, which was held over until the close of the meeting.
